

1. Even if these elements are governed by different brain centers, neurophysiologists Shizgal and Conover have pointed out that there has to be an “evaluative circuitry” that reduces them to a common currency: “For orderly choice to be possible, the utility of all competing resources must be represented on a single, common dimension (1996).”